The Association of Level of Internet Use with Suicidal Ideation and Suicide Attempts in South Korean Adolescents: A Focus on Family Structure and Household Economic Status

L'association entre le taux d'utilisation d'Internet et l'idéation suicidaire et les tentatives de suicide chez les adolescents sud-coréens: mettre l'accent sur la structure familiale et le statut économique du ménage

Seo Yoon Lee, RN, MPH[1], Eun-Cheol Park, MD, PhD[2], Kyu-Tae Han[2],
Seung Ju Kim, RN[2], Sung-Youn Chun[2], and Sohee Park, PhD[2]

Abstract

Objective: To examine the association between the level of Internet addiction and suicidal ideation and suicide attempts in South Korean adolescents, focusing on the roles of family structure and household economic status.

Methods: Data from 221 265 middle and high school students taken from the 2008–2010 Korea Youth Risk Behavior Web-based Survey were used in this study. To identify factors associated with suicidal ideation/attempts, multiple logistic regression analysis was performed. The level of Internet use was measured using the simplified Korean Internet Addiction Self-assessment Tool.

The Blank Slate

Knowledge is developed through one or more mechanisms, subject to certain constraints inherent to any logical system. Knowledge and the method by which that knowledge is organized influence subsequent inquiry and further knowledge development. The higher goal of knowledge development and organization is the attainment of wisdom, which may be defined as the ability to apply relevant knowledge to situations different from those in which the original knowledge was developed. The Data-Information-Knowledge-Wisdom (DIKW) knowledge pyramid provides a way of clarifying these relationships to further this goal. This knowledge pyramid has utility in the consideration and organization of geospatial knowledge.

The term tabula rasa ("blank slate") refers to the belief that people are born without knowledge and that their knowledge is gained through experience and perception. The concept describes how pieces of data, such as observations, sights, sounds, smells, are received and written on a blank slate and, subsequently, how those data are manipulated to create knowledge. In the debate over nature versus nurture (that is, the question of which is the primary determinant of human behavior) the concept of tabula rasa argues that the answer is nurture.

Although Aristotle wrote about the blank slate in On the Soul, it appears that the concept was not developed formally for more than 1,000 years. The Persian philosopher Ibn Sina (Avicenna) defended the theory of tabula rasa in the 11th century. Ibn Sina argued that the "human intellect at birth is rather like a tabula rasa, a pure potentiality that is actualized

The Data-Information-Knowledge-Wisdom (DIKW) knowledge pyramid provides a way of clarifying these relationships to further this goal. This knowledge pyramid has utility in the consideration and organization of geospatial knowledge.

The term tabula rasa ("blank slate") refers to the belief that people are born without knowledge and that their knowledge is gained through experience and perception. The concept describes how pieces of data, such as observations, sights, sounds, smells, are received and written on a blank slate and, subsequently, how those data are manipulated to create knowledge. In the debate over nature versus nurture (that is, the question of which is the primary determinant of human behavior) the concept of tabula rasa argues that the answer is nurture.

Although Aristotle wrote about the blank slate in On the Soul, it appears that the concept was not developed formally for more than 1,000 years. The Persian philosopher Ibn Sina (Avicenna) defended the theory of tabula rasa in the 11th century. Ibn Sina argued that the "human intellect at birth is rather like a tabula rasa, a pure potentiality that is actualized
